Question 1

(4 marks)

Match each underlined item with the grammatical feature listed below (1-8).

Non-formal education is a methodology, which is carefully adjusted to the participants and structured practices, although the activities are seldom associated to conventional rhythms of curriculum subjects. This fosters the personal, social and professional development of people. Informal learning is related to what one can learn during daily life activities (work, family, leisure, etc.) which is considered learning by doing. Informal and non-formal learning can empower youngsters in important conceptions, like social inclusion, anti-discrimination, and active citizenship, as well as contributing to their personal growth.

SECTION E

(4 marks)

Read the article and choose the best answer for the questions that follow. The paragraphs in the text are numbered.

(1) Pastoral leaders are no longer simply dealing with straightforward playground issues. As digital technology becomes a greater part of pupils' lives, we now have to investigate incidents that have not taken place at school, but outside of school walls and hours, often in the comfort of our pupils' homes. The variety and complexity of online incidents vary greatly: anything from a pupil being ignored in a chat room to online bullying (including fake profiles and stalking), sexting, pornography, grooming and radicalisation.

(2) We are spending a lot of time being reactive in dealing with the aftermath of digital relationships going wrong. But what if we were to instead focus on preparing our young people for the digital world and on empowering them to create and sustain positive relationships? If we can teach pupils not to engage with unhealthy situations or relationships online in the first place, then we can stop being reactive and start taking a more proactive approach. Here are three steps in the right direction.

(3) In order to respond to risk, pupils need to be able to recognise it. It is important for pupils to be aware and mindful of the following signs of unhealthy relationships:

- Feeling you have to hide things, be secretive.
- Making it difficult to maintain relationships with family or friends.
- Verbal, emotional or physical abuse (using the 'silent treatment', disappearing, name-calling, etc.).
- Controlling behaviours (excessive calling, texting, stalking, lack of privacy, etc.).

(4) Most of these signs can be easily applied to real life situations as well as the digital world. Parents and schools need to be working in partnership to educate young people about healthy and unhealthy relationships and how to recognise the signs. At the same time, although educating about the risk is a necessary preventative measure, it is not enough. It is important that young people act on this awareness. In order to do this, they need to act from the position of mental and emotional strength and be prepared to break unhealthy attachments.

(5) It is when we are feeling vulnerable that we are more likely to engage in unhealthy relationships in our conscious or unconscious search to satisfy basic human needs, such as the need for belonging and acceptance and the need to feel valued and secure. Empowering young people to look after their mental health and wellbeing and creating secure environments at school and at home should be our number one priority.

(6) Healthy behaviours are underpinned by values and morals. This is especially true when forming positive digital behaviours and healthy relationships, as we should expect our young people to uphold the same standard of behaviour online as in real life, acting with integrity at all times. Schools must make every effort to include character education as an integral, natural part of school life. It needs to be reflected in the school ethos and values and incorporated into all parts of the day-to-day school life and routine, because “everything in a school’s moral life affects character, for good or for ill” (Gelpi; 2008).

QUESTION 2

(12 marks)

Read the following texts and identify what level of the CEFR (A1 – C1) they represent.

1

• Tweeners and teenagers do not think much about a hobby nowadays unless it has something to do with watching T.V. or playing video games, where they can be found on the edge of their seats concentrating on pushing buttons as quickly as possible. Their free time activities have become less active than ever before. They tend to keep their emotions inside which has the effect of teenagers bursting into tears and/or exploding in anger. Parents and schools need to pay more attention to how students spend their free time and encourage more active and creative hobbies, such as painting or hiking. When their bodies are in motion, chemicals called endorphins are released which can cause more positive feelings about themselves and their surroundings.

2

• Young people like the mall because it has many different shops and fun things to do. The first floor has clothing shops, shoe shops and toy shops. The second floor has a food market. People can eat Chinese, Mexican, Greek and Italian food. The third floor has a multi-screen cinema. They show three movies at the same time. You can buy popcorn, other snacks and drinks there. On the fourth floor there is a play area. Young people can play many games there and have a good time. Parents can relax with a cup of coffee and watch their children play at this place.

3

• Millennials are keen on the latest technology, fantasy sports and video games. Most of these activities are undertaken at home while fidgeting with the latest computers. Their age group (18-29) is most likely to have a profile on social networking sites, nearly one-in-four have a piercing somewhere on their body, and they are more likely to have a tattoo. Studies show that they value their family most, and they wouldn't be caught dead pining over wealth and fame. Due to their tendency to burn the midnight oil, millennials are co-habiting out of wedlock and not producing offspring. To make a long story short, millennials are a new breed of humans, who are tolerant and liberal; they cherish their privacy but are not afraid to surf the net for the latest information and/or communication just ICYMI.

4

• Fourteen-year-old Jennifer says that her favourite activity is cooking. She enjoys this activity because she can learn about food and different cultures at the same time. She likes to cook in her grandmother's kitchen because it is larger than her kitchen at home, and she can listen to her grandmother telling stories of the traditional way of life while sharing the wonderful dishes she prepares. Moreover, she thinks it's a great way to learn about recipes that her grandmother used in the past. Because of that, she can bake traditional food in a modern way with trendy ingredients used today.

QUESTION 3

(8 marks)

A professional development seminar has just finished. Four teachers are reflecting on the seminar on teaching methodologies and approaches in EFL that they use. Match the methodology/learning approach in the box below to the teachers' statements (1-4). There are three extra methodologies/approaches that you will not need.

- (A) The Silent Way      (B) Audio-Lingual      (C) Suggestopedia      (D) Total Physical Response
(E) Task-based Language Learning      (F) Community Language Learning      (G) CLIL

When I teach, I never use the L1. I only use the L2 in the classroom to practise any new grammar or vocabulary, and I expect my students to do the same. In order to achieve this I run a lot of drills during my lesson and find them to be most effective. My students just practise until they can spontaneously use the language.

I like to have a very active classroom with a lot of verbal cues and responses. The kids are always doing something, you know similar to the game Simon Says. I usually give a command and act it out, then I ask two to three students to respond, then perhaps the entire row of seats or the whole class responds. After that, I write the command on the board. Then it is the students' turn to give out commands or statements and the class responds to them. I find this to be a great language learning approach for my classes!

I like to encourage students' creativity and language fluency in the classroom. There are three specific phases of my lesson plan and all three are student-centered. Students realise the importance of foreign language learning because every activity focuses on a real purpose which encourages authentic language communication. It's always great fun to review the learning artifact that each group collaboratively creates. I believe this approach empowers the students to think out of the box.

I like to focus on communication and find this much more important than accuracy. During my lesson I like to put emphasis on lexis and not so much on grammar. I put the focus on language that is related to the subject. Pre-, during-, and post- reading tasks that deal with a specific content allow learners to notice the use of the language regardless of the level of language competence.
