Address by the Minister of Education and Culture

It is with great satisfaction that I welcome this year's online edition of music partnerships between the Ministry of Education and Culture and other cultural and educational institutions and organisations. This is an ongoing initiative taking place for the seventh consecutive year and it is realised through a series of remarkable musical actions implemented with the participation of a large number of students and the cooperation of major cultural institutions.

In the context of the recent educational reform, the Ministry of Education and Culture acknowledges the importance of an educational policy that promotes the values and ideals of humanistic education, considering the contribution of culture as particularly important. To this end, a key aspect of the educational reform has been the expansion of the institution of the Music School in lower secondary schools in all five regions in Cyprus. During the last ten years, the Music Schools institution has offered the opportunity for children with a special interest in music to develop their musical talent, to broaden their musical training and to further cultivate their musical education. The educational programme applied to Music Schools includes partnerships with agencies such as the Cyprus Symphony Orchestra Foundation, municipalities, communities and established artists from Cyprus and abroad.

Moreover, the Ministry offers, in collaboration with other cultural agents, a number of additional programmes aimed at children with a particular interest in music, such as the regional student orchestras in Nicosia and Pafos and a new wind instrument workshop inaugurated this year at schools of the Municipalities of Engomi and Ayios Dometios.

At the same time, ongoing partnerships with cultural agencies such as the Cyprus Symphony Orchestra Foundation, the Pharos Arts Foundation, the Photos Photiades Cultural Foundation, OPAP Cyprus, etc. continue to offer music education programmes to as many students as possible reaching all schools in Cyprus. Programmes offered include educational concerts, open rehearsals, master classes, seminars and annual musical actions such as the choir workshop and concert, the Musical Vibes concert and the student composition contest Marios Tokas - Kostas Montis.

The continuous enhancement and growth of musical partnerships proves that effective interaction between cultural institutions, the cost-effective use of existing resources and the possibilities of modern technology can promote the further development of music education in our country.

The Ministry of Education and Culture recognises and commends the Music Partnerships between Education and Culture presented in this year's edition and we confirm our willingness to continue investing in the cultural development of our country's young generation.

Costas Kadis

Minister of Education and Culture

AIMS OF MUSIC EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMMES AND ACTIONS

The educational programmes and actions showcased in this year's edition were developed in the context of a music education programme that aims to promote the interaction of school music and community, through a variety of musical experiences in performing, composing and active listening, inside and outside school, which are expected to encourage young people's life-long active participation in culture and the arts.

Specific aims:

- To encourage knowledge of and participation in the cultural life of the community.
- To connect school music education with community music, thus enriching the music curriculum and formal music learning.
- To foster a diverse and comprehensive education for future artists, as well as to increase public participation in the arts, through appropriately designed musical experiences that promote musicality and creativity.
- To demystify the notion of the "classical orchestra" and "classical musicians", firstly, through enhancing active audience listening skills and secondly, through active participation in diverse musical activities.
- To develop personal and interpersonal communication and collaborative learning skills.
- To enhance a positive attitude towards local traditional heritage and the importance of its preservation.
- To develop a positive attitude towards music in an intercultural context.
- To enhance innovative entrepreneurship by contributing to the personal and professional development of musicians.

About 10% of secondary school students currently participate in educational programmes. Although an increased number of educational programmes are offered in Nicosia, there is a need to promote new partnerships with cultural agents in other regions, so that all students in Cyprus have equal opportunities for participation.

In the context of improving dissemination through the use of digital technology, a number of programmes has been broadcasted live during school time or video recorded, and broadcasted through a special channel on the Cyprus Ministry of Education and Culture website, thus making the video recordings available for future educational use.

There is a continuous effort to consistently upgrade the quality and long-term effectiveness of all programmes through systematic monitoring and evaluation.
